SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Paul J. Adams Papers, Addition 1A, 1951-1981, consisting of approximately 97 items and three (3) volumes, spanning the years 1951-1981, consist of cards, certificates, clippings, correspondence, financial documents, journals, lists, printed materials, and sketches.

Biographical information about Paul J. Adams (1901-1985) may be found in clippings, correspondence, journals, and sketches. A sketch about Adams that was submitted to the American Malacologists, is a condensed list of his accomplishments as a naturalist, forest ranger, florist, gardener, mason, mountain climber, weaver, etc. There is also an article written about Adams which appeared in the Tennessee Conservationist (1985), shortly after his death.

Fifty-four letters of correspondence are contained in the papers, mostly between Adams and his brother Robert W. Adams, of Knoxville, and several old friends. All of the correspondence by Paul J. Adams is typed on carbon paper, and relate memories, past experiences, and routine activities with his wife Maxine Day Adams, at Crab Orchard, where they had lived since 1935.

A journal dated 1977-1980, is a continuation of the journals he started in 1907, on natural history (the entire set of journals have been donated to TSLA). The last addition to the journals consists mainly of daily accounts of the weather at Crab Orchard, routine activities, his health, and reminiscences. A list of articles woven by Maxine and Paul Adams from 1964-1977, is included, that gives totals of every item they made in their cottage weaving business.

Printed materials in the collection contain two volumes prepared by the United States Department of the Interior: A Draft Environmental Statement; and General Management Plan for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park (1979). Also included is a copy of Knoxville Lifestyle magazine autographed by Margie Ison, who was the weather forecaster for Channel 10, WBIR television in Knoxville, and a friend of the Adamses.
